

How are we doing in Wales?

Public Engagement Survey on Health and Wellbeing during Coronavirus Measures

Week 27 (5th to 11th October 2020)

Public Health Wales are conducting a public engagement telephone survey to ask members of the public in Wales how coronavirus and related control measures are affecting their health and wellbeing.

The survey interviews approximately 600 randomly selected individuals every other week. The information collected provides the basis of the results presented in these bi-weekly reports. Survey data are adjusted to represent the Welsh population by age, sex and deprivation.

In each survey week, some questions are added and others are removed, depending on emerging issues. This week's report contains several new questions, including on: knowledge of and compliance with restrictions; concerns about the impacts of coronavirus over the winter months; and perceptions of future responses to coronavirus.

The report also includes initial findings from a follow up survey conducted with 383 parents and caregivers of school-aged children who had previously participated in the public engagement survey. The survey asked participants about the impacts of coronavirus restrictions on their children's wellbeing and schooling over the initial weeks of children's return to school.

We thank the people of Wales for giving us their valuable time to support this work.

585 Welsh residents aged 18 years and over were interviewed in week 27 of the survey (5th to 11th October).

of people thought they were more likely to catch coronavirus from people they didn't know (e.g. in shops, supermarkets and public places) than people they know (e.g. family or friends).

48%

of people say they understand the restrictions in their local area 'very well' and a further 37% 'quite well'.

27%

of people have been worrying 'a lot' about their mental health and well-being; up from 21% in the last survey week.

of people said they had left their home to meet family or friends at least once in the last 7 days; down from 46% in the last survey week.

47%

of people said they were following coronavirus restrictions 'completely' and a further 43% reported majority compliance*

70%

of people think we will still be having local lockdowns in six months time, and 32% of people think we will be in a national lockdown in six months time.

41%

of people are concerned 'a lot' about their ability to keep in touch with family and friends over the coming months as we head into winter.

64%

of people thought that up to six people were allowed to meet outside if social distancing was maintained; 18% correctly identified the limit as 30 people.

60%

of people would favour restrictions that apply to all people to reduce coronavirus across the population; 40% would favour protecting older and vulnerable people while letting others return to normal life.

*Mean proportion

Between 14th September and 2nd October, a follow up survey was undertaken with a sample of parents and caregivers of school-aged children who had previously participated in the national public engagement survey. The survey asked about the impacts of coronavirus restrictions on child wellbeing, schooling and feelings about children returning to school.

A total of 383 parents and caregivers participated in the survey. The majority were female, aged between 30 and 59 and of white ethnicity.

This section presents some initial findings from the survey. Data are unadjusted and are not necessarily representative of all parents and caregivers across Wales.
